Creativity Coaching for Personal Empowerment
Cyncie Winter, MH, MA, LPC

Greetings!

I am a professional artist, a creativity coach, and a Licensed Professional Counselor in private practice. I am also a faculty member of the Therapeutic Writing Institute where I teach online courses on the creative process. In 2011, I began studying Creativity Coaching with Eric Maisel as an adjunct to my therapy practice. Eric is a psychotherapist, professor, and prolific author, who teaches creativity coaching, deep writing workshops, and Life-Purpose Boot Camps at an international level. Later, I began to teach Jill Badonsky's methods for empowering creativity, drawing upon her book The Muse Is In. Jill is also an internationally-recognized workshop leader, keynote speaker, creativity coaching pioneer, illustrator, and humorist, as well as the founder and director of Kaizen-Muse Creativity Coaching. I decided to pursue these studies for two reasons:

1. to empower clients who are working to create new directions and new visions in their lives; and also
2. to support artists in their expression and careers.

Please read the information below to help you understand how creativity coaching works.

What Creativity Coaching Can Do

- Provide strong and valid support as we work to empower your creative process
- Work with common creative issues such as time management, perfectionism, resistance and rebellion, fear, overwhelm, ruthless self-talk, self-sabotage, procrastination.
- Incorporate strategies from a bank of established creativity coaching tools
- Help you navigate the challenging stages of the creative process
- Anticipate and manage the natural anxieties that may arise from engaging with life at a creative level

How Creativity Coaching Works

- Set up coaching sessions any way you like--through one-on-one sessions, or Skype/FaceTime consultation.
- Decide how often you would like to work--weekly, monthly, long-term, fluctuating back and forth between business coaching and creativity coaching.
- Read the Profile and Policies Packet. Let me know about any questions you might have, fill in the required information, and sign and return the forms by scanning your documents or sending them to me by mail.
- Determine what issues you would like to address with each session.

I am looking forward to working with you!
